NICK JARDINE

World Indigenous Business Forum

Nick Jardine is an entrepreneur, and long-time supporter of the World Indigenous Business Forum. Born in South Africa and raised in Australia, Nick developed an early passion for entrepreneurship, construction, and rugby. His journey brought him to Canada in 2006, where he pursued his love of rugby while building a new chapter as a business leader.

In 2009, Nick founded Urban Handyman Inc., a full-scale renovation and construction company built through determination, hands-on expertise, and a commitment to quality craftsmanship. Within just a few years, Urban Handyman Inc. grew from a startup into a recognized business, leading Nick to become the Head Contractor for Season 1 of W Network's hit series Love It or List It Vancouver, which aired on HGTV in the United States as Love It or List It Too. Nick has also shared his construction expertise through projects including CBC's Weather Gone Wild Home Audit.

Beyond his professional accomplishments, Nick has been a valued supporter of WIBF since its early years. Whether helping with stage management, assisting with MC duties, or volunteering behind the scenes, Nick has consistently given his time, energy, and expertise to support the success of the Forum and its mission.

Over the years, Nick's contributions have made a meaningful impact, helping create an environment where Indigenous entrepreneurs, leaders, and changemakers can connect, share knowledge, and be inspired. His presence, guidance, and commitment to supporting others continue to strengthen the WIBF community.
